

Planning for High School with College in Mind

This workshop is designed for eighth grade students and families. Transitioning to high school can be a stressful experience for students and families...but it doesn't have to be!

This workshop provides a road map for eighth grade students (and their families!) who want to enter high school with a long term plan to ensure success in the college process, without adding undue stress and tension to the process.

We will discuss:

- Fears and fantasies about the college process
- What students should (and should NOT) be worrying about as they begin high school
- How parents can support their students in this process (and why it's time to start stepping back!)
- How to create a realistic, manageable college process for your family

Speakers:

Dana Roth and Debbie Schwartz are Associate Members of the Independent Educational Consultants Association. They advise students and families on the college admissions process. Dana is a social worker who has completed a Certificate in College Counseling from the University of California-Los Angeles (UCLA). She is an active volunteer for Cornell University's Alumni Ambassador Network and for the Resiliency Center of Newtown. While working in admissions at Yale University, Debbie interviewed both U.S. and international applicants, reviewed applications, and participated in admissions committee meetings.

For more information or to schedule a workshop for your organization, please email collegecounselorct@gmail.com or phone (929) 279-2228.